Eyes In The Sky and the BIRDS OF PREY CAMPAIGN

Light at the End of the Tunnel

by John O'Brien, Dolores Pollock & Julie Kummel

Eyes in the Sky (EITS), a Santa Barbara Audubon Society (SBAS) educational outreach program, began in 2000, when Gabriele Drozdowski, the program's executive director, approached SBAS to ask for support with creating an environmental outreach program that utilizes non-releasable birds of prey to educate community members about birds and their surroundings. SBAS accepted the proposal, and EITS was "born".

EITS presents its wildlife ambassadors—birds of prey native to our area—to children and adults throughout the greater Santa Barbara area. Drozdowski and 15 volunteer docents present scientific information, share stories of encounters between wildlife and humans, and educate audience members about personal actions they can take to help protect wildlife and its habitats. EITS's ambassadors provide a personal glimpse into the lives and natures of our wild neighbors and increase audience members' awareness of how their actions affect wildlife and habitats. And, of course, most of you know our star ambassador, Max, the Great Horned Owl that helps rear orphaned baby owlets each year.

All EITS birds of prey are no longer able to survive in the wild on their own. They are kept under license from the California Dept. of Fish and Game and the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service.

The MAX Project (Museum Aviary eXhibit Project)

After several years of EITS presentations at the S.B. Museum of Natural History, the Museum's Director, Dr. Karl Hutterer, approached SBAS with the idea of potentially re-locating the birds to the museum, a collaborative venture in which EITS would continue to run its program but from the Museum location instead of Drozdowski's residence where EITS is currently located.

A Memo of Understanding was agreed to by the Museum and SBAS back in the fall of 2005 detailing the purpose and responsibilities of both parties and presenting an initial timeline for the construction of the aviary that would have the birds living at the Museum by the summer of 2006.

One must remember we live in Santa Barbara where getting anything approved and built can take some time, and add to that doing it at such a historically significant location as the Museum of Natural History, and you can appreciate why we are where we are. Over the past four years we have reduced the size of the aviary from 800 to 650 square feet, and we have moved its location from across the creek to behind the McVeagh House. With its new location certain, design changes were required to make the aviary better match the historic surrounding structures. The good news—the great news—is that we have finally obtained conceptual approval by Santa Barbara City's Historic Landmarks Commission. We can now finalize the engineering drawings, pull the building permits, and begin lining up our construction contractors. Move-in-date, with fingers crossed: end of 2009!

Max

The MAX Project becomes the BIRDS OF PREY CAMPAIGN

Now it's time to raise money to give Max (and five other rescued raptors) a new, permanent home. It is the Museum's first exhibit of living birds. The MAX Project is now The BIRDS OF PREY CAMPAIGN, underway and moving full steam ahead with past donations, a bequest, and a generous foundation grant. SBAS plans to raise $150,000 to build the aviary and support our educational programs. We are almost half way towards our goal!

If we can raise the remaining funds, we could build as early as this fall. We are asking for donations now to construct the new aviary—a public outreach with educational advantages to all those who come to the Museum. Children will be able to visit Max and the other birds whom they met in their classrooms. The aviary will also be a home base for the volunteers who care for our birds.

Names of donors to the aviary will appear on a Donor Wall. Naming opportunities exist for those who wish to underwrite significant portions of the project, either in their name or in honor or memory of a loved one. Audubon members, we are asking for your support.

For more information on The Birds of Prey Campaign, contact Julie Kummel at jkummel@rain.org or 964-9444 or go to the SBAS website at: www.santabarbaraaudubon.org/BOPCampaign2009.html.

ON the WINGS of ART -- SBAS July Fundraiser!

Santa Barbara Audubon Society in collaboration with SCAPE (Southern California Artists Painting for the Environment) will host “On the Wings of Art,” a two-day art exhibit in La Arcada Plaza to benefit SBAS. The event will take place on Saturday, July 18 and Sunday, July 19, 2009, from 11:00 a.m.-6:00 p.m. in La Arcada Court/Library Arts Plaza between the Santa Barbara Museum of Art and the Main Library at 1114 State Street and 40 E. Anapamu.

Each year, SCAPE (www.s-c-a-p-e.org) organizes the La Arcada show to help a local environmental cause. This year, SBAS is the lucky recipient. Proceeds from the sales of paintings will benefit SBAS education programs like Eyes in the Sky and Meet Your Wild Neighbor and preservation activities like the Snowy Plover program.

Like all of SCAPE's annual La Arcada shows, it is an event you won't want to miss! “On the Wings of Art” is an open-air, juried show and sale featuring art works inspired by the birds of the area, and emphasizing preservation of shoreline and bird habitat. Expect to see unique paintings of Santa Barbara's coastline and its wildlife by some of the area's most well-known and inspired artists. Arts writer Josef Woodard recognized members of SCAPE as “artists who find plenty to paint about in the area's unspoiled wilds and who are intrinsically passionate about preserving nature's beauty in our midst.”

A reception with a raffle for a case of Los Cinco Locos wine will be held Sunday, July 19th, 4 to 6 p.m. Raffle tickets may be purchased @ $20 each or 3 for $50. Ticket holders do not need to be present to win. Los Cinco Locos is a special handmade wine created by local wine makers and available only at charitable events.

The show is free and open to the public. Art sales will benefit SBAS.

For more information, call Julie Kummel at 964-9444 or Dolores Pollock at 681-8661.

Offshore Oil Platforms As Fish Habitats

Dr. Milton Love

Wednesday, June 24, 2009

For the past 14 years, Milton (only his wife calls him Dr. Love) has investigated the role that offshore oil and gas platforms might play as fish habitats. The results of this research have made him at least mildly unpopular with some members of the environmental community, which is ironic because that is the side of the street upon which he normally frolics. Come join us and listen as Milton purveys his results, and see if he winds up being mildly unpopular with you.

Dr. Milton Love is a research biologist at the Marine Science Institute, University of California, Santa Barbara. He has been investigating the marine fishes of southern California for over 40 years and has written over 50 publications on their ecology and behavior. Proving that you can fool some of the people all of the time, in 2007 he was awarded the Carl R. Sullivan Award for Conservation of Fishery Resources by the American Fisheries Society.

Audubon California Honors local Volunteer

Audubon California honored Santa Barbara Audubon Society board member, Steve Ferry, at its annual Asilomar State Chapters Conference for his “exceptional service to Audubon values, in California.”

Ferry (a retired Raytheon project manager) regularly participates in the Central Coast chapters council; volunteers with the Coal Oil Point Snowy Plover project; actively monitors California Condors in the back country; chairs Santa Barbara Audubon’s conservation committee; sits on the Endowment Committee; has served on a work group to reduce conflicts between migrating birds and wind farms; and, in his spare time, serves on the Audubon California board as a chapters representative. Congratulations, Steve!

Correction. In our rush to get the previous issue of El Tecolote to the printer one of the points of the new membership category was printed as: Most of membership dues applied to national issues; it should have read: All dues applied to local programs and issues (currently NAS keeps most of your dues after the first year).
